DECORATION DAY.

BY MARK MEREDITH.

Oh, day of garlands bright and fair,
A nation honors thee!
Thou holdest in thy tender care
Thy sons, land of the free!
Wreath now each spot of silent rest
With blossoms pure and gay;
Together now one love attest
On Decoration Day!

With martial tramp, oh! comrades go
Where lie the friends of old;
Beneath the sod there is no foe!
Fame hath their story told,
The muffled drum they cannot hear,
And Honor guards each grave;
With tributes tender gather near
The slumbers of the brave!

For them the glory and the gain,
Oh, Nation, proud and grand!
Thy children have not died in vain
For Liberty's sweet land
The garlands fade; but never more
Their memories shall die—
Who rest, the strife and conflict o'er!
Their fame shall Time defy!

Honor the heroes of this day,
All one in heart are we!
Heap them with blossoms, bright and gay,
Fit emblem for the free!
The ages long their praise shall sing,
Thou flower and bloom decay;
Find sweetest blossoms of the Spring
For this Memorial Day!

VOODOO MAN BONGOLA.

BY J. H. CONNELLY.

On the night of Feb. 9, 1864, a great number of Federal soldiers escaped through a tunnel from Libby Prison. I have a very vivid recollection of the fact, for I was among those who got away. A few had in Richmond friends who hid them within sound of the prison bell until pursuit was abandoned; but the great majority of us, as soon as we got out of the tunnel, scattered and broke for the open country, trusting to luck to avoid recapture. We had not much fear of dogs tracking us, for there was a heavy storm and the rain washed away the scent of our trail, but we were badly handicapped by our ignorance of the country. Before starting we had been told what direction North was—the way we wanted to go—but turned loose in the dark and storm to dodge through the city streets and find our way out of them, we soon lost all ideas of the points of the compass. At least I know that I did, and a young chap named Chambers—who was a lieutenant in an Illinois cavalry regiment—pooling his chances with mine, was just as much lost as I was when we stopped to take breath and decide on a course.

After all the consideration we had time for, which was not much, we concluded to just keep on going as fast and as far from town as we could, in a straight line and trust to luck for its being the right direction. Well, it wasn't. As we learned from a friendly colored man whom we encountered a little before daylight, our noses were pointed for the South. But perhaps that was lucky, after all, for flight in that direction was least likely to be expected by our pursuers. The darkey managed to hide us during three days and two nights while pursuit was hottest. Then he pointed out the way we should go and started us off afresh. And not the least of his kindness was giving us some pointers on how to find and approach his people to win their confidence and obtain their help.

Hiding by day and traveling cautiously by night, we got along pretty well, excepting that we suffered a good deal from cold, our clothing being insufficient. On the fifth night we were plotted to the cabin of an old colored woman who was called "Aunt 'Liza." She was one of half a dozen superannuated slaves who, in ways best known to themselves, managed to exist in the once populous "quarters" on the Peyton estate.

While we were enjoying a long day of sleep and rest in a warm bed—such luxury as had not fallen to our lot before in many months—Aunt 'Liza pondered upon the situation and evolved a brilliant idea. After dark, over a substantial meal of hoe cake and roast raccoon, she stated it. We were little likely to get through to the Federal lines, in her opinion, as we were. Confederate troops were constantly scouring the country in all directions, and sooner or later would, by sheer accident, encounter us. They would never let two Yankee fugitives get by them, but would not think of interfering with a Confederate officer taking back to Libby a fugitive he had recaptured. Chambers, who looked a good deal like a Southerner, should be the captor and I the prisoner. Not only his looks favored selection of him for the role of the Confederate, but the fact that an old uniform of "po" young Mas'r Peyton" would just about fit him.

My comrade did not like wearing the grey, even as a disguise, but the scheme was a good one. The clothes fitted well, and were warmer than the rags he wore, and a pair of revolvers went with the uniform, so he resigned himself to the situation. The only addition to my outfit was a bed cord attached to my right wrist, for my captor to hold me by. Aunt 'Liza wanted to put it around my neck, but I objected. It would have seemed too suggestive. When we were leaving she directed us upon a route that would bring us safely to a cabin where we would not only be perfectly safe for a day's rest, but sure to receive important aid, the nature of which she would not define.

"Nobody gwine come ernigh you'ns at Doctah Bongola's," she said. "He's mighty pow'ful Voodoo man. Guess he's de oldest man in de w'ld. Nobody knows how ol' he is. He jes' can't die, dey say, befo' de debble 'pints some one in his place. De brack mastah come when he call, an' do what he say. De ghos' an' sperrits, an' debbles am 'roun' his cabin at night thicker'n de leaves on de bushes in Summer. Don't you er nigh it befo' you hvah's cocks crow'n' fo' daybreak. Aftah dat soun' dey got no mo' powah. Befo' dat dey moe' like teah you in teeny bits. Wait by de big dead pine I tole you 'bout 'till you hvah de cocks crow. Den you be safe. An' he be yu' frien' when he know who you is. Ah! Doctah Bongola mighty big frien' and ter'ble enemy. He know w'ods strike a man dead like de lighnin'. White folks knows dat. Dey don't go foolin' 'bout him. You'ns is safe dah."

The night was cold, walking not bad, and we made haste, so it was little past midnight, judging by the stars, when we reached, and positively identified the dead pine tree where Aunt 'Liza had told us to wait.

"Gosh!" exclaimed Chambers, "I shall freeze if I stand around here three or four hours waiting for the fire, we got our first good look at him. No matter how old he was, he looked his age, and yet he stood erect, seemed vigorous, and even wore an air of pride and conscious power. His deeply sunken eyes, face seamed and wrinkled with as many lines as are upon a "crackle" jar, and hands like the talons of a bird, were the indications of his weight of years.

He, at the same time, got his first good look at us and was visibly affected by it. In the scanty moonlight grey could not have been told from blue, but before the fire the difference was readily apparent, and the sight of the Confederate uniform—though neither of us then thought of it as the cause—worked a sudden change in him. He staggered, coffee, and a pail of water. When he had put the pot, duly charged, on a bed of coals, he set two tin cups on a table before the fire. While hobbling about he cast the most devilish glances, furtively, at Chambers, who seemed to be rendered so nervously uncomfortable by them that he got up and went out, muttering something about wanting fresh air. The puff of cold air that came in as he opened the door waked me out of the doze into which I was falling, so that I was fully conscious of a strange change in the old man's actions, but curiosity as to what he was up to made me simulate sleep.

He had been going about like a semi-paralyzed crab. All of a sudden he was as quick as a ebber cyah off he kill a niggah? It's ouah tu'n now! I kill em all ef I could."

"How do you know he is a Southerner? His companion is not!"

"Look at he's grey unifo'm, he's face, he's haa'. Oh! He one ob de 'mahstahs', sure 'nough. An' I kill 'em! Been a waitin' dis hundred yehs for dis yer promised time. What else I done lib for so long? I jes' a waitin' my time to kill. Dah's a many ol' scabs on my back an' on my haa't, made long befo' you was born, missy; an' I'll hab a 'mas-tah's' life foh ebery scab befo' I die." There was froth on his lips, the fire of madness in his eyes, and he shivered as with an ague.

I could stand it no longer, feeling that my comrade's life was really in very serious danger from this irresponsible maniac, and, springing to my feet, said to him: "You are wrong about him, old man. He's a good Lincoln soldier, same as I am, and my friend. We've just got away from Libby, and Aunt 'Liza put that uniform on him as a disguise, so that if the Johnnies meet us, he will pretend to be a Confederate officer taking me, a prisoner, back to Libby."

Only the last words seemed to reach his consciousness, and, of course, were perverted by his crazy imagination. "Aha!" he broke in. "Wha'd I say? He tek you back! No! my son; no! He no tek you back to no Libby. Voodoo tek him back to deddeble wha' he b'long. Missy 'Siny' spile one way. No mattah! Voodoo got many. I put de spell on him."

"Bongola! Hush! Not another word!" cried the girl, who seemed really frightened for a moment. Then, seizing him by both shoulders, she faced him around so that she could look squarely into his eyes and commanded: "Look at me! straight in my eyes!"

He obeyed, and under the magnetic force of her gaze, seemed to recover gradually from his excitement. When he appeared able to comprehend she said to him: "You know I never lie."

"No, you don't, Miss 'Siny,'" he responded mechanically.

"Am I ever mistaken?"

"No, Miss 'Siny.'"

"Now, hear me well and understand me as I tell you—the man in grey is one of our friends. He is not a Confederate soldier. You must help and not hurt him. Do you understand?"

"Y—yes, Miss 'Siny,'" he stammered, but in evident bewilderment.

She eyed him doubtfully for a moment; then, as if by a sudden inspiration, caught a string about his neck and plucked from its place of concealment in his breast some small pendant which he wore as an amulet. This she held before his eyes, saying, impressively: "Swear—by this—that you will be his friend, his brother; that you will put no spell upon him, but help him to escape and in no way hurt him."

Submissively he responded, "I swear it!"

She touched the fetich to his lips, then let it fall upon his breast, and in nervous haste he hid it away again.

There is no use in attempting to deny that I felt much easier in my mind. The old negro did not look like the sort of creature for a young, strong man to expect danger from, but youth and strength are not everything. A man may weigh fifty times as much as a rattlesnake, but will have the worst of the quarrel if the snake gets to him first. And I remembered that hidden leathern bag.

Lieutenant Chambers came in again, just as Doctor Bongola was placing a clean cup on the table for him, and received his pleasant greeting: "The coffee is ready, and I was just about to call you, sir." Again his speech was under full control, and the dialect gone, yet I could see that every now and then, when his eyes fell upon the grey uniform, he shuddered, and evidently had a struggle with his wandering wits. Touching furtively the fetich in his breast seemed to help his memory.

The quadroon girl was an astonisher to Chambers and a puzzle to me. Her complexion and association were altogether at variance with her commanding manner, language and fine Caucasian outline of features. The Voodoo man's submission to her influence was not reconcilable with the supposition that she was of his race, yet her knowledge of his fetich and its effective use could hardly have been expected of a white girl.

During the day she herself cleared up the mystery. She was Miss Euphrosyne Cuthbert, daughter of a Virginia Unionist, who had fallen a victim to his loyalty. Bongola had been bought by her grandfather as an act of kindness, simply to save him from a very cruel master, who had done him great wrongs, and her father had manumitted the old slave many years before the war, for which the black man's grateful devotion to the Cuthbert family was unbounded. Business—the nature of which she did not then explain—sometimes brought her to this part of the country, near her old home, and as the family mansion had been burned when her father was killed, she had no temporary shelter so convenient and safe as the cave apartment behind Bongola's carpets.

Eventually we succeeded in safely reaching the Federal outposts. Chambers was sent to his regiment, which had been ordered West. In April, when I was on staff duty at brigade headquarters I again saw Miss Cuthbert. She was visiting the General, had no walnut juice on her face, and, was then the prettiest girl I ever saw. We had a long talk and I learned what the "business" was that took her inside the Confederate lines in disguise. It was fearfully risky work. The Johnnies would have hanged her if they had caught her and known how well she served the Federal cause. And I wanted her to give it up, for I began to find myself taking a great deal of interest in her. She would not, however, so long as she could be of service to her country, she said. But it was finally settled between us—on the 30th of May, as it happened—that we would be married in a year from that date, if the war were ended by that time and both of us still alive. Lee's surrender at Appomattox Court House, on April 8, '65, settled the war, just in good time for us and we finished our programme without a hitch. That is why Decoration Day is a most important anniversary in our family, aside from its public character, but recurrent recognition of our own happiness in its observance does not diminish our tender sympathy with those who keep the day as holy to memories of the lamented brave, both blue and grey.

some chicken to tell me I may go ahead."

"I'm not going to," I replied. "I don't believe any chickens have roosted high enough to save their lives in this part of the Confederacy anyhow, and I don't believe in ghosts."

"Well," answered Chambers doubtfully, "as for ghosts, I don't say that I take much stock in them myself; but I've heard enough about this voodoo business not to want to tamper with it loosely."

"Oh, well! If you're afraid let us wait."

"Lieutenant Hunter, I'm not afraid of anything that doesn't scare you."

"Then let us go ahead."

"Suits me."

We had not gone twenty paces when right in the path before us, in arm's length, stood "Doctor Bongola," silent and motionless. I would admit that for just a little part of a minute I did take him for a sure enough ghost, he had appeared so suddenly and quietly. But then I realized that the old fellow had been mooning about, crouched down behind a bush when he heard our voices and suddenly stood up when we reached him. That was all there was to it, but it would probably have scared a darkey almost into fits.

"We are Federal soldiers, escaped from Libby. Aunt 'Liza sent us to you," Chambers told him.

"She did well," replied the old man. "Northern men are my friends. Come with me." He spoke slowly, with very distinct enunciation, in which there was hardly a trace of negro dialect.

We followed him to his cabin, a rude log hut, built against the steep face of a hill, in the heart of the forest. Its mean exterior gave no promise of the astonishing conditions inside. A great pile of glowing coals heaped against a huge black log in the large fire place, threw a dull red light upon what seemed at first a bower of tropical foliage and bloom, but which, on closer examination, proved to be simply heavy Brussels carpets and rugs, rich in colors, covering every inch of floor, walls and ceiling.

By the blaze of a light wood knot he threw upon and, all at once, seemed transformed from an erect, self-reliant man to a senile, cowering, but malevolent lout, with a baleful light of hate glittering in his small, twinkling eyes. But I hardly thought of the change beyond supposing he had braced up his nerves to meet strangers and then dropped back into his normal condition.

Chambers seated himself on a stool at one side of the fireplace, and I laid down opposite him. The old man shuffled about in a seemingly objectless way, moving like a crab, gibbering to himself unintelligible words and occasionally flashing at my comrade a glance of concentrated malignity.

I found myself yawning, and then Chambers, involuntarily imitating me, as a person will nine times out of ten when facing a gape, opened his mouth until the top of his head looked like an island exclaimed, "Stop it! Confound you! You'll make me dislocate my jaw."

"Can't help it," I replied; "the heat makes me drowsy, and I don't want to sleep yet awhile, either. I wish I had a—Say, old man! I've got a wad of what the Johnnies call money! and if it's of any use to you, I'll give you a twenty dollar note of it for a pot of coffee. I don't think myself it's worth the coffee."

"But it's the only sort of money we've got," added Chambers.

Doctor Bongola seemed to pull himself together and grinned at me as he replied: "I think as little of Confederate money as you do, sir. It say all go, with its makers, to the devil, for aught I care. But you don't need any money here. I wouldn't take gold from you. Coffee or anything else that I've got you are welcome to."

It seemed to me that he had to use some effort of self control, and that his utterance was a shade more negro like than it had been, but I was too drowsy to draw any inferences or wonder why he pointedly addressed me and ignored my companion, as he did.

From some hiding place behind his carpet tapestry he brought out a coffee pot, canister of ground monkey. He jumped across the room, sprang up on a stool, thrust his arm behind a carpet, and brought to view a little leather bag. The next instant he was back at the table, putting something out of the bag into the cup, on Chambers' side of the table. In a little time more as it takes me to tell it, he had hidden the bag away again, snatched up the coffee—that was boiling over—and filled the two cups. Then he stood still, grinning, chuckling and rubbing together his bony, claw-like hands.

"What are you doing?" demanded a voice behind him, hardly louder than a whisper, but in a tone of authority.

Opening my eyelids wide enough for a peep, I was amazed by the sight of a third person in the room, a tall, handsome quadroon girl, who seemed to have materialized from among the big roses and lilies on the carpet. At least I had no other way, at the time, for explaining her presence.

The old negro turned quickly toward her, making a hideously wry face, hesitated, and, trying to evade meeting her eyes, answered evasively, his excitement betraying him into a broad negro dialect:

"Nuffen, Miss 'Siny; nuffen. Jes' makin' coffee fo' de gemmen."

"What did you put in that cup?" she demanded, sternly.

"Nuffen," he replied, sullenly.

She eyed him keenly for a moment, then, taking up the cup he had dosed, said lightly: "Oh! very well then. I will drink this coffee. I wanted some," and raised it to her lips.

He leaped to her, caught her arm with his trembling hands and exclaimed: "No! No! Miss 'Siny. No! Fo' de Lawd's sake; don't wet yo' lips wid dat."

"I thought so," she rejoined, coolly, pouring the contents of the cup into the ashes. "Why did you want to kill him?"

His face distorted by passion, his talon fingers working convulsively, and his whisper sharpened to a hiss, he retorted: "What South'n gemman

The Cincinnati scored their third consecutive victory over the visiting team on May 10, the contest being full of exciting incidents. The right-inning LaJoie was declared out for interference and the whole of the visiting team gathered about the umpire and began making his life miserable when that official borrowed a watch and warned the players that they would have to wait to play ball at once or quit. They preferred the former and to their positions. The game was protested by Manager Stallings. Loose fielding on the part of the visitors, aided by timely batting by the home team, told the story of the former's defeat. The long safes were the home team's, and the triplets by Delahanty, Clements and Irwin, and doubles by Delahanty, Gillen and Schriner.

NOTICE To Medicine Lecturers.

THE VENO DRUG CO., Pittsburg, Pa.

Were the first people to cure cripples upon the public platform in America. They were successful in these operations, as their immense business proves, because no other medicine could accomplish the work. Several unscrupulous fakirs have put up cheap imitations of these goods and sold them to lecturers without any advantage. Their medicines fail to do the work and only bring disappointment to the lecturers who try to make cripples walk with them. You cannot sell large quantities of medicine unless you do genuine work and have advantage. In order to cut out our would-be imitators we will sell the Veno Remedies, with instructions how to handle cripples, at $10.00 a gross each, for 50c. size, including an abundance of 3 sheet lithos, 1 sheet litho, life and character of Veno, Veno's Journals and other advt. matter. Write at once. VENO DRUG CO. (Incorp.), Pittsburg, Pa.

The Ring.

The Championship Fight Rehearsed.

The veriscope pictures of the Fitzsimmons-Corbett fight at Carson City, Nev., on March 17, were first exhibited in public at the Academy of Music, this city, on Saturday evening, May 22, the exhibition having been unavoidably postponed from the previous week, owing to the machine not having been properly prepared. So great was the interest manifested in the display that every inch of space in the auditorium of the big building was occupied, while among those present was a goodly sprinkling of ladies, who appeared as much interested in the exhibition as were those of sterner stuff.

The pictures were projected upon a canvas stretched across the stage, the figures being almost life size and perfect, and the scenes that occurred within the ring on the day of the fight, from the moment the principals entered it until the crowd surged upon the platform at the close of the battle, were truthfully depicted upon the canvas. Barring the dancing light, that was rather trying on the eyes, the exhibition proved an entire success, and those who witnessed the display went home well pleased with what they had seen. The presentation also settled two important matters that had been in dispute, owing to the assertions made by irresponsible people, which were emphasized by alleged veriscope reproductions in certain sensational newspapers, to the effect that in the sixth round Referee Siler did not begin counting soon enough when Fitzsimmons was down on one hand and one knee, that he was on the floor more than ten seconds, and that Fitz delivered a foul blow in the closing round, after he had knocked Corbett down. The "can't tell a lie" veriscope pictures prove conclusively that these assertions are utterly false, as every intelligent, thinking person already knew they were; for each principal had an alert timekeeper at the ring side, to act as a check on the official timekeeper and on the referee, while, had any foul been committed at any time, the seconds and backers of the man fouled would have been quick and persistent in claiming it, whereas nothing of the sort occurred on the day of the fight. Common sense alone, without the aid of the veriscope, is sufficient to disprove these sensational stories, given utterance to after the lapse of two months by parties who have no regard for the truth. "Seeing is believing," and to see the views of the fight presented by the veriscope is all that is requisite to convince the doubting believer that Fitzsimmons won the battle fairly, and that Referee Siler performed his whole duty. It is to be regretted that Corbett, after repeatedly acknowledging himself beaten honorably, should allow his disappointment to so sour his temper as to induce him to appear in print in a winning letter in support of the proposition that he was the recipient of a foul blow. This will certainly act as a boomerang wherever the Stuart veriscope pictures are shown, and will as surely not assist in inducing Fitz to give him another match.

WE HAVE RECEIVED FROM S. Lubin, manufacturer of Philadelphia, Pa., the manufacturer of the cinematograph, three excellent photographic views of the ring at Carson City, Nev., where the championship battle was fought by Bob Fitzsimmons and Jim Corbett. The views are from snap shots taken by an expert in the inclosure and show the principals, their attendants and the spectators quite distinctly.

MARTIN FLAHERTY and Joe Hopkins fought twenty rounds to a draw at the Empire Athletic Club, Buffalo, N. Y., night of May 24. Hopkins did all the leading for the first fifteen rounds, and administered severe punishment, but Flaherty afterwards rallied, improved considerably, and was well and strong at the close, while Hopkins was bleeding freely from the mouth, but was steady and strong upon his understandings.

TOMMY RYAN engaged in a twenty round bout with Pat Heady at Washington, D. C., at the arena of the Ritz Athletic Club, of Rochester, N. Y., night of May 24, but so much the cleverer boxer and punishing hitter was Tommy that the contest lasted but six rounds, in the last of which Heady was repeatedly knocked down, his seconds elevated the sponge in token of defeat.

JACK DELANEY received the decision in a twenty round glove contest with Jack O'Brien at the Polo Athletic Club arena, this city, night of May 22. He outpointed his adversary easily, but the latter stood up to his work manfully, although continually getting the worst of it, and by his gameness, and the inability of his opponent to finish him, managed to stay the limit.

BILLY DACEY, of Brooklyn, N. Y., denies that he recently defeated John Kaima at Charlton, Ia., saying that it was another party, who has apparently taken his name, and with whom he is not desirous to be confounded. Billy of old has permanently retired from the P. R.

HARRY FISCHER, of Brooklyn, N. Y., polished off Con Doyle in a twenty round bout before the Queen City Athletic Club, Elmira, night of May 21, the fight lasting the agreed upon limit.

TOM WILLIAMS and Tommy Ryan are matched to fight twenty rounds at the Empire Athletic Club, of Syracuse, N. Y., on the night of June 21.

TOM WILLIAMS, the Australian, returned to our shores on May 22, his object being to meet Tommy Ryan.

Death of Charles Cavill.

A dispatch from Stockton, Cal., states that the well known Australian swimmer, Charles Cavill, was asphyxiated by gas night of May 22, while doing an under water performance in a tank. He had been advertised to attempt to stay under water over five minutes and five seconds, a performance that no man could be expected to place to his credit, the best feat of the kind on record having been that of Prof. Engle, who accomplished it in Lowell, Mass., March 28, 1896. The dispatch further states:

His death revealed the fact that he used an inverted tub and breathed air from the tub. Cavill gave an exhibition in the Stockton bathhouse, and persons placed the tub in the tank during the afternoon. It seems that the water in the bath came from an old natural gas well and that the gas in the tank was not as good as the gas in the water in the tank. When Cavill sank to the bottom of the tank and placed his head under the tub, expecting to breathe pure air, he inhaled this stinging gas and immediately lost consciousness. His associates knew nothing of his peril, but waited six minutes. Then he became alarmed and dived for his partner. He found Cavill with his head under the tub, and the physician felt that the man's limbs knew that the swimmer was dead. Cavill's death was a tragedy, and the doctors said that Cavill's lungs contained no water, which was clear proof that he was asphyxiated by gas. Cavill was a family friend, and his death was a great loss to the swimming community. He was a native of Australia, and had won many records and medals. He was a very strong swimmer, and was able to stay under water for a long time. He was a very popular man, and his death was a great loss to the swimming community.

The New Rochelle Club's Spring Regatta.

For special classes was sailed Saturday afternoon, May 22, on Long Island Sound, off Echo Bay. The wind was very light at first, but before the course was sailed enough and to spare in the way of a breeze was experienced by the watermen. Three of the starters did not finish, the winners turning up in Win or Lose and One or Two.

Yale's Spring Regatta.

On Saturday afternoon, May 22, proved a success. Eight races were rowed and a good crowd were well entertained. Besides the races summarized below, the University crew pulled an exhibition with the freshmen. The results follow:

Scratch races, seven eighths of a mile—First heat, Van derbilt Hall and Meander crews, won by Vanderbilt Hall Time, 17.52s. Second heat, gentlemen's eight and Co'strel's, won by Co'strel's Time, 3m. 3s. Final heat, Vanderbilt Hall and Co'strel's, won by Vanderbilt Hall Time, 3m. 4s.

Class races, mile and a fourth—First heat, Vanderbilt and Freshmen, won by Vanderbilt Time, 6m. 38.5s. Second heat, Sophomores and Freshmen, won by Sophomores Time, 7m. 2s. Third heat, Juniors and Freshmen, won by Freshmen Time, 6m. 42s. Final heat, Sophomores and Freshmen, won by Freshmen Time, 6m. 42s.

YALE FRESHMEN HAVE BEEN BARRED FROM THE INTER VARSITY RACE WITH WISCONSIN. The affair will therefore be a match between the Westerners and the Yale Varsity crew, and not a triangular race. Captain Bailey, of the Yale crew, announces that the following candidates will be given a bye:

Bailey, Griswold, Campbell, Greenwood, Langford, Marsh, Mills, Rogers, Whitney, Allen, and Green, coxswain. This practically settles the membership of the Yale crew for the season.

The Orilla Regatta.

On the Queen's Birthday, May 24, attracted a goodly crowd of Canadians to the shores of Lake Simcoe, and, although there were only two events, the sport was very enjoyable. The wind was high and the water rough when the preliminary race of the day between Dr. McDowell, of Chicago, Ill., and Humhor, of Orilla, was rowed. The struggle was by no means satisfactory, as the Canadian withdrew after McDowell had led him over the first quarter mile of the course. The star event was more interesting. The water was in anything but good condition when Jake Gaudaur, the world's champion sculler, and Erasmus Rogers, of Worcester, Mass., lined up for the start in a two mile, with a turn, race. The start was fair, and the men rowed well together till nearing the turn, when the champion easily pulled a length away. On the journey home Gaudaur permitted the Saragolito to stay within a length, but when approaching the finish line the Canadian spurred and finished easily two lengths to the good.

RICHARD POLEY, an Irish yachtsman of prominence, died suddenly at sea recently. He was commander of the Irish Red Cross Yacht Club, and for many years was identified with all aquatic sports in the harbor of Cork.

COL. CHARLES ERLANKOTTER, for twelve years president of the Atlantic Boat Club, of Hoboken, N. J., died at his home in that city May 18, aged fifty years.

LANTERN SLIDES WITH STARTLING EFFECTS FOR
"ASLEEP AT THE SWITCH."
Now ready and copyrighted. The spectacular effects produced from the lantern in connection with orchestra effects eclipse anything heretofore attempted. The views for this song are the first that have ever been copyrighted. No expense has been spared in making this the greatest song ever illustrated for stereopticon. There is a thrilling effect of a freight train in motion being sidetracked, and the midnight express rushing by at full speed, together with other midnight railroad signal effects, which cannot fail to bring down the house. The up to date singer will secure this before anyone else has it. Write at once to

SHOOTING THE CHUTES.

IT'S THE SPORT OF KINGS.
ATHLETIC FIELD, INLET PARK,
BUFFALO, N. Y. ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
THE LEADING WATER CHUTE PARKS OF THE WORLD.
Season Opens About June 15.
ALL PRIVILEGES FOR RENT.

APPLICANTS must state fullest possible particulars at once. Privileges that are acceptable will make big money, but they must be high class and adapted to respectable patronage.

MAY SHARE WITH A FEW.
IN BUFFALO, this will be the first season of the famous PAUL BOYTON WATER CHUTES. In addition to a local and suburban population exceeding half a million, arrangements are pending for over thirty big State and National Conventions, that will attract multitudes from every part of America; and for the Bicycle Track on our Grounds, over twenty meets have been arranged, each of which will draw thousands, who will be brought in direct touch with our sports and entertainments. The Buffalo season will in all probability run into October.

IN ATLANTIC CITY, THE INLET WATER CHUTE PARK, under my management, has had over Ten Thousand Paid Admissions in One Day, and these admissions included nothing but entrance to the grounds. THE PRESENT SEASON THE GROUNDS WILL BE OPEN FREE TO THE PUBLIC, and will, beyond doubt, attract over a million visitors. The location has many advantages over the Board Walk for money making purposes, as visitors to this part of the island come to spend money and not look at the ocean. Vast improvements are now under way, and the opening will be a revelation. LIBERAL ARRANGEMENTS MADE. Apply quick, and address me to May 30, care RICHARDSON & FOOS, 112 Fourth Avenue, New York; after that,

JOHN M. HICKEY Athletic Field, Buffalo, N. Y.
